Reward of Merit.

This is taken from one of the exceedingly interesting letters of the late Franklin K. Lane, now appearing in The Star.

"I found in Washington the secret of the exceeding great authority which the older states carry in Congress.

They return their senators and congressmen, term after term, and give them opportunity to rise to positions of eminence in the national legislature. The usefulness of a senator is not to be measured by the roundness of his periods, nor even by the soundness of his ideas. He must pass through a period of impatient waiting before his status is such that he can really have the opportunity to have his ideas considered seriously. By returning men who have been faithful to the state strengthens itself in Washington and eventually gains greatly in prestige."

The older states early adopted the policy of choosing their senators and representatives in Congress with care in the first place, and putting them on their competency and good behavior, so to say. Then, if the chosen ones met expectations, they were greeted at home at the next election with the cheering salutation, "Well done, good and faithful servant! Enter upon new terms, and quit yourselves in them, as you have done in the terms now ending, like men and legislators!"

Out of this has grown, logically and justifiably, seniority in committee promotions. On their first appearance in Congress, senators and representatives are assigned to committee work. If they show taste and talent for the work allotted they are continued in it. They are treated on Capitol hill as at home. As a good record there leads to a reassignment, a good record here leads to a reassignment. Men are kept where they have shown capacity to serve.

In time come changes. Men at the top pass out some to other than legislative duties, some to private life. Men at the bottom—proved men—are advanced to the vacancies, and in season reach the top, well equipped for their new places, and a guaranty of intelligence in the shaping of legislation.

YALE SENIOR FATALLY HURT

When Automobile Overturned—His Companion Escaped Unhurt

WERE RETURNING FROM PRINCETON

David Phipps Parker of New York City the Victim

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 20.—David Phipps Parker, a senior at Yale university, of New York City, was killed on the Milford turnpike last night when his automobile struck a rough spot in the road and overturned. Parker was hurled from the machine and was crushed so badly that he died while being rushed to the New Haven hospital.

Charles Edgar Stokes, Jr., Parker's classmate, of Trenton, who was in the machine, was hurled to the road also, but escaped uninjured.

The students were returning from Princeton where they had seen the Yale-Princeton game, and had stopped off in New York to visit Loomis H. Park, the father of the dead student.

Stokes, who is on the football squad, said that the car was running smoothly when it suddenly hit a hump in the road and overturned.

Parker was 22 years old, was prepared at Lawrenceville and entered Yale three years ago. He was a member of the Yale quartet, the Yale Glee club and the Alpha Delta Phi.

Luther And The War.

Curiously enough the gravamen of the World war has been thrown on Luther's shoulders by his fierce theological critics, which in a sense modernizes the old issue. Kaiser Wilhelm was and is a Lutheran. That he is a devout Lutheran is asserted and not denied. That he was inclined to identify his interests, his policies, his power and those of the Almighty is rather generally conceded by Protestants. Accepting the concession, the Roman Catholics reason thus: "No sovereign acknowledging the supreme authority of the church would or could have developed such a case of megalomania. Destroy the principle of ecclesiastical authority over interpretation of the written word of inspiration, and all things are possible. Nor is it possible wholly to flout the reasoning. But in essence it is the individualism of Protestantism that is being assailed, not merely Lutheranism."

The answer might be that the incompatibility of autocratic government with the faith of Luther is all that is proven. If so the evil that caused the World war was the existence of autocratic power of a sort not existent in any other Protestant country. And it might incidentally be mentioned that Austria was Roman Catholic, and that here was the direct action that made war inevitable. The discussion is not without interest even for the non-devotional masses. That the question will ever be conceded to have been settled is very unlikely.—Brooklyn Eagle.

That Revealing Profile.

We have always thought that the best way to tell a person's character was by examining them full faced, so it was a surprise to hear a noted physiognomist say recently that when he wants to be sure of getting the best results he examines the profile. The full face is what we present to people when looking at them and expecting their criticism; eyes are alert, mouth arranged in a becoming line and facial expression at its best.

The profile, however, is the aspect of the face that the rest of the world most sees and it generally sees it in off moments when we are unbecomingly at critical glances. A person whose full face may be bright and alluring may have a profile which in repose is dull and listless, mouth drooping and facial muscles relaxed. The muscles of a woman's face are softer than those of a man's and so they are particularly susceptible to unsightly sagging and unbecoming changes from every mood.—The Designer.

"Now I want you to write a short essay using words that end in 'tion,'" said Miss Manning. And this is what he read:

"My father's hair is a recollection; mother's is an acquisition; sister's is a combination; brother's a configuration; and baby's is an anticipation."

He didn't say anything about the sentence that looked much like "teacher's is a discoloration."—Bur-lington Clipper.

WOMEN SAW ARCHBISHOP

Besieged Residence in Interests of Mary MacSwiney

BRIEF INTERVIEW BROUGHT CHEERS

Maude Gonne MacBride and Countess Markievicz Among Them.

Dublin, Nov. 20.—A crowd of women and girls marched last evening from Mount Joy prison, in which Mary MacSwiney is maintaining a hunger strike, to the palace of the Archbishop of Dublin. They found the outer gates closed but used other entrances and soon a considerable number of them were sitting on the doorsteps of the archbishop's residence while others were in scattered groups about the premises.

The deputation, which included Maude Gonne MacBride and the Countess Markievicz, had a brief interview with the archbishop about Miss MacSwiney's hunger strike. After the interview the demonstrators left cheering.

A Little Eagle Screaming.

The Englishman who has remained unknown as to name and good as to income as the "Gentleman with the Duster," who did the "Mirrors of Downing street," has written some terrifying things about the United States. This country with great resources but no co-ordination of its industries, with all the gold in the world and great trepidation about it, with no conscience but many bills due against Europe, is a reed which bends to every wind which Great Britain withstands as a rock.

As a multiple-tongued country we have no cohesion. We have resources but no completeness in them. We almost make a thing but then need an import. We almost make a nation but a foreign element destroys it.

We quiver, therefore, as a reed in the wind. This is a dune, something which the wind and the water change. We shall go down, gulping and strangling.

All of which is not so good. The gentleman with the duster refers to the United States as they. We seek no further point of difference from him. To anyone to whom the United States appears as they, the United States, IT, is doomed of necessity. The United States is in the comprehension of its citizens IT. The most offensive title which can be given to this country is the states. What jelly formation can people imagine this nation has? It has states. They challenge each other with their beauty and their diversity and we hope they always will, from the Maine woods to the cane brakes of Mississippi, from the bayous to the lakes of Wisconsin, from the woods of Minnesota to the Ozarks, from the water front of New York to the harbor of San Francisco. We hope that from the redwoods to the big pines and from the fat hog of the stockyards to the razor-back of the mountains, from the pickers caught through the ice of the tarpon caught in the warm waters this country will retain its diversity, but when Europe thinks it is bending as a reed it should consult a man filling a silo out in Iowa.

If a resident of London should go to the wall of the Mersey at Seacombe opposite Liverpool and listen to the talk of the children who swarm up as the tide chases them, he could not understand their language. No aristocrat or bockney could possibly understand the language of the Lancashire children who have come over to the Cheshire side. That after a thousand years of an established tongue. This United States, which is and is not, can take a heavy oaf of the hills of Italy and in two years make him speak an American tongue which is as understandable in the Everglades, as it is on Catalina island.

If the United States are, they are broken roads in the wind, but it happens that they are not, but IS, and as such will test its faults against any wind which blows.—Chicago Tribune.

Exercise in Moderation.

Exercise in moderation is essential to health. It keeps one's powers of exertion properly active, aids digestion and helps the appetite. Formerly strenuous gymnastics were advised, and laborious stunts involving great fatigue. Later teaching is all against these things, for men of sedentary habits and many of the boys of today will tell you that plenty of brisk walking in the pure open air, with morning flexing of the muscles of the abdomen, arms and back are quite sufficient.

In all exercise the heart muscle should be considered. No undue strain should be put upon it during the day, and particularly not during the night, which is the only time the heart has a chance to slow down and rest. The greatest temperance argument is the fact that a few glasses of wine taken habitually with supper stimulate the heart to more active exertion than it undergoes during the day, and rob it of the rest to which it is entitled. When the heart "strikes"—good night!—Chicago Journal of Commerce.

Poor Parking Place.

Even the youngsters keep up to date in their metaphors. Willie had forgotten several of the things his mother told him to get at the store and when asked about it he said, "Well, mother, all I can say is, my memory is not a good parking place for all the things you tell me to get."—Boston Transcript.

OLEAN, N. Y. OIL BOOM.

Oil Pocket Formed by Seepage Causes Foreign Population to Be Excited.

An oil pocket formed by seepage from the Vacuum's Oil company plant the last forty years is furnishing a big boom in the north end of Olean. The foreign population living around the Vacuum's refinery is drilling wells and pumping oil. One well in the rear of the home of Joe Ridi, at Elm and Vine streets, is producing four barrels an hour at $4 a barrel.

The oil excitement is a repetition of one in a Buffalo street, in 1910, when seepage from the Standard Oil company's station in North Fourth street furnished a boom. Drilling operations are of the simplest as the oil is located only a few feet below the surface. Pipes are driven into the ground and hand pumps are operated.

Pioneers are Frank Grasso and Joseph Scutella of Water street who, driving a well one year ago, obtained a short time ago and sank a well. Then the boom broke an dthe entire neighborhood became active, drillers going too deep to get water with oil. There may be hundreds of barrels of oil under the land and the boom may end as suddenly as it began. Huge tanks have overhauled and other accidents have caused the oil to seep down in the pool.

The residents are after the oil twenty-four hours a day now for they do not expect the easy money to last forever. It is estimated that thirty wells have been drilled the pool was struck.—Buffalo Express.

Conserving Gasoline.

The automobile driver, who seeks economy of operation and waits at his bus because it is a "gas hog" has only himself to blame for the heavy consumption of fuel and oil.

A common fault which cuts down the gasoline mileage is the excessive use of the brakes.

The brakes should be used to slow the car down when it is necessary and the driver should watch his road so that the car will slow down from its own weight, which in the great majority of cases can be done without the use of the brakes.

When the brakes are applied the car is going at a certain clip, and that was obtained by the speed of the motor which was dependent on the amount of gasoline consumed.

If the driver had been watching he would have known that he must slow down at a certain place and could have slipped his clutch allowing the car to coast the short distance, slowing itself down as it did so, and thus the driver would get the benefit of the gasoline already consumed.—Farm Life.

Cause of Effusive Gratitude.

"Well, thank the Lord, I never spent five or six of the best years of my life foolin' round no college," said the money-wealthy man.

"Might I understand you," said the thoughtful-looking listener, "to thank the Lord for your ignorance?"

"You may put it that way if it suits you any better," snapped the money-wealthy man.

"Then," said the thoughtful-looking listener, "Thanksgiving day ought to last at least a week at your home."—Farm Life.
